Joseph corners 'market' on goats

While taking home serious hardware and cleaning up in the Born and Raised category is satisfying, Joseph said the long haul is also important.

Written by Nancy Spencer Saturday, August 24, 2013 12:00 AM - Last Updated Saturday, August 24, 2013 12:15 AM

"It's not about winning and losing it all; I've had my fair share of losses and wins," she said. "I've learned it's about taking all the experience over the years and putting it toward the next year's project."

The Junior Fair Board member is in the Allen County Does and Kids 4-H Club and gives credit where credit is due.

"My leader, Karinda Miller, is an amazing woman and runs a very organized club," Joseph said. "Our club is thorough and even exhibitors with projects other than goats receive individual treatment in order to help them prepare for the fair."

Joseph enjoys passing on her experience as well.

"I've learned to share my experiences with those younger than me so I can help them in the best way possible," she added. "I love being an example for the youth and sharing with them."

When she's not hanging around the goat barns, Joseph can be found munching on fair food.

"The food! That's my favorite part of the fair," she said with a laugh. "Being a runner, I love all the fair food."

Joseph corners 'market' on goats

Written by Nancy Spencer Saturday, August 24, 2013 12:00 AM - Last Updated Saturday, August 24, 2013 12:15 AM

Joseph was also in the Allen County K-9 Dog Club for seven years.